President Harding, blind to everybody, congratulates the father and mother of quadruplets, who named Warren Harding. The credit in general is to be concentrated on the fact that quadruplets are rare. If human beings had young ones as the mice do, and if they lived, the earth would have been hopelessly overpopulated long ago, and rich folk would be hunting and eating each other for lack of other food. The bigger the type the fewer the arrival. The oyster has millions of young ones in a year. One elephant one in two years.

Many families from New York will soon start for Idaho, traveling in 125 automobiles, with trailers behind, and sleeping in the trailers. That is an improvement on the old prairie schooners and interesting to railroad managers. One hundred and twenty-eight automobiles will carry many "settlers" at a considerable saving on railroad rates. Each family will have a farm and each farm is said to be offered cheaper than dollars for a land immigration for Idaho.

Fathers and mothers in the expeditions take their pick of their children to grow on the farm, not on paved city streets.

You have heard of high wages for mechanics building the house, more for the plumber and that "organized labor" refused to do a piece of work. This one ever heard what was to be paid the bricklayers on the building of the Empire State in New York reveals the fact that the bricklayers' union, a powerful body, refused to allow a workman a dollar an hour. It compelled the owner of the building, Empire Trust Company, to pay more. This made the building expensive, made the building slower, made it impossible for the owner to get enough rent to pay for the land, the cause of all the trouble. And the gentlemen interested in rent for public use will be glad to know that the public is getting the benefit of it, and they can't complain that labor has had little to do with it.

This is the housing situation, according to Mr. Hoover. We are short of houses because we have been doing just enough to keep up, or not up to, with fires and destruction. Mr. Hoover says the building industry and the labor unions will solve the problem. More power to him. He also says that building costs are high because the United States uses more lumber, per capita, than any other country. Probably the reason is that we have more forests, more lumber, more wood than any other country. In Europe, from constantly cutting and replanting, they get the wood they need.

Dr. Wiley knows all about food and says "boiling water is sure and dependable." Perhaps it is, but it is probably impossible to get a boiling hot drink in the average restaurant. Ask for a cup of hot water and they will find that the water in the coffee urn has had that "boiling" all night. Ask for tea, and you will be told, "this is the only boiling hot water in town."

Home brew is the only brew in town.

From today, if you get married in Wyoming, you must have a doctor's certificate testifying to your physical soundness. That is a splendid new law, but you wonder what the world has said about as well and as long without it. Why not require a certificate that neither of them has been married before?

Four "Moderate" Socialist Deputies want the French government to "cancel the 100 billion paper francs, the money" to be used for reconstruction, etc. The Communists want an end of paper francs, "the money" to be used for the average person to understand it, but that is difficult for the average person to understand. The case: After such an issue of inflation money, the franc, now worth over eight cents, would drop to five cents or two cents, and everybody in France would be worse off. Strange, but true, that the child's mind is blind, within his means, and that of a nation is not.

Even Russia is looking for business. Her first order for twenty-five million dollars gold has been placed with England, and the first cargoes of goods from Russia to England are starting on their way. England does business with "we talk first and about the kind of government that Russia ought to have. "Any little government that will buy and sell is the right little government for me," is the English song.

The latest report, probably false, is that Trotzky is dying of cancer. If that is so the mysterious cancer growth will do more than the Allied armies were able to do.

Russia and Germany have a trade agreement; Polish territory stands between; Russia says she will invade Poland if Poland refuses free transportation of goods across her territory.

The Bolsheviki have a simple way of going at things; no round-about diplomacy.

GERMANS MAY ATTACK POLES

Berlin, May 21—Germans of this district are preparing to defend themselves against Poles, it is declared in Upper Silesian circles here. This, they say, is the only available means left to them, since the Allied Commission has declared that the plebiscite will be held without police or troops. "The only gambling holes in town."

Home brew is the only brew in town.

WAR ROMANCE OF BIDDLE BROKEN

Philadelphia, May 21—Mrs. Nancy Cromwell Biddle, who did emergency and work in the devastated regions of France during the war, was granted a divorce today by Judge Bonniwell from George Biddle, a former army lieutenant.

Following the outcome of a wartime romance, Mrs. Biddle made an overland record back of the Lines of Steel when the declaration of war was signed. Then she returned to this country to find Biddle in training with the Pennsylvania National Guard. Their marriage followed.

POLICE HALT YOUTHS IN BORROWED CAR

Jackie Auslen, recently of the Lenox School, and Hart Heath, grandson of Maine, were interrupted in their protected trip West in a borrowed automobile when they were halted by a police squad in a car on Cook square by a traffic officer. Jackie goes back to the Lenox school and Hart is being held by the police.

SEVERAL WOUNDED IN DRESDEN FIGHT

Berlin, May 21—One thousand Hamburg workers of the German Communist faction, armed with Saxon Socialist Democrat rifles, made a battle for Upper Silesia and several persons were wounded, said a dispatch from Dresden today. The Bavarians were going as volunteers to fight the Poles.

Today to Be Hottest May Twenty-First

All heat records for this date are in danger of being hopelessly cracked by the mercury's climb to 86 degrees at eleven o'clock today.

The two hottest previous May 21st's recorded by the local weather bureau were in 1880 and 1911, when 87 was reached. This mark, said Forecaster Smith, is likely to be exceeded by two or three o'clock when he expected to see the thermometer registering at least 90 degrees.

In hot wave records all over the country eight o'clock reports showing that the mid-noon recorded temperature was at Modena, Utah, where the temperature dropped to 40.

In Boston it started its upward climb at one o'clock this morning, reaching 82 at ten o'clock.

SERIOUS RIOTS IN ALBANY STRIKE

Albany, N. Y., May 21—State militia may be called out to maintain order here.

The capital city, following order of a trolley strike of five months' duration, last night and early today was the scene of serious rioting when automobiles attacked cars and effectually stopped all trolley service.

Strike sympathizers and police, who have resumed twenty-four-hour strike duty, found a resentful crowd beyond their control at times.

Witness, the summary stopping of which brought about riot conditions again, today are openly and defiantly operating.

MELLON FAVORS BEER FOR SICK

Washington, May 21—Secretary of the Treasury Mellon today gave a new ray of hope for medicinal beer. He said he favored making beer available for the sick, regardless of what Congress did with the Volstead bill to outlaw real liquors.

Reversal of the former policy of the treasury to withhold regulations for the manufacture and sale of beer on doctors' prescriptions, was practically decided upon by Mr. Mellon.

Secretary Mellon was informed that the Volstead amendment forbidding beer might not be acted upon finally for six weeks or possibly two months.

There was another hearing before Judge Parker in Boston Federal Court in connection with suits brought against Robert M. Hinkley of Brookline by Miss Peggy Grace, film star, and her father, J. Grace.

YANKEE GOLFERS DEFEAT BRITONS

Hoylake, Eng., May 21—American crack amateur golfers outclassed the star British team in the international match in fourteen singles matches. Guilmet and Guilford gave an impression of what might be in store when they defeated Cyril Tolley, English champion, and Holderness by three and two. Next to Bobby Jones Guilmet and Platt, who beat Ie Montmorency and Wethered, one up.

Fred Wright, Jr., and Fownes had an easy time with Aylmer and Armour, leading them home by four and two.

DWARF KILLED IN RUNAWAY CRASH

Laconia, N. H., May 21—George I. Glinden, forty-four years old, a dwarf, was almost instantly killed when the horse which he and a fellow farm hand from the Glinden farm in Guilford were driving to mills suddenly became frightened and run away.

The victim was thrown over the dash-board of the wagon and was killed by a kick from the horse.

KING GEORGE PICKS DEMPSEY

Paris, May 21.

KING GEORGE VI

JACK DEMPSEY

KING GEORGE of England picks Jack Dempsey to beat Georges Carpentier.

This royal sporting forecast was revealed here today by Hugh C. Wallace, the American Ambassador to France, who was recently the guest of Lord Derby in London. King George would like to see the fight, but, of course, being a king, he cannot run across the Atlantic to Jersey City.

Ambassador Wallace went to England to see the Grand National, one of the classics of the British turf. He met King George and, as moving pictures of Carpentier had just been shown at Buckingham Palace, the conversation naturally turned to the approaching international prize fight in America.

"I was disappointed that London was not picked for the fight, as I had hoped to see it," said the King. "I regret that I cannot go to America and be at the ringside. My own opinion is that Dempsey is too heavy for Carpentier, although Carpentier may surprise the Americans."

HOSPITAL BURNS AT DEER ISLAND

Spectacular Fire Gives Firemen and Convicts Hard Battle Before Being Subdued

Heroism on the part of two convicts at the Deer Island House of Correction in aiding to fight a fire, which destroyed two wards of the prison hospital, cost them their lives.

The prisoners were overcome by smoke and died on the boat conveying them to the Long Island Hospital.

Arthur Noonan, twenty-eight years old, of Dorchester.

William B. Smith, twenty-eight years old, of Dorchester.

FIREMAN IS INJURED.

Harold Reade, of Engine No. 21, Winthrop, was seriously injured when overcome by smoke during the fire from the top floor of the building. He fell thirty-five feet to the ground. He was rescued by Lieutenant James Howard, a prisoner, and rescued.

The fire was one of the most spectacular ever witnessed at the island in years and the flames could be seen for miles.

The hospital ward formerly used as a confinement camp for "Reds" and later has been used for the detention of guests.

PRISONERS MAN ENGINE.

Previous to the arrival of the fire-boat 47 from East Boston, Engine Company 21 from East Boston, and the Winthrop apparatus, and scores of prisoners, headed by Fred Wentworth, manned the hand engine on the island and played several lines of hose upon the flames, while others formed a bucket brigade, until the fire-boat arrived.

Institution officials, fearful lest some of the prisoners might attempt to escape in the excitement, sent a number of guards over the island for fear of soldiers, but the convicts who donated the honor of the Municipal Athletic League and not one deserted in duty fighting the flames or was missing at roll call.

The blaze was discovered by six prisoners playing ball and resulted in a damage of $20,000. There were no prisoners in either of the wards burned.

FIREBOAT HANDICAPPED.

Because of shallow water the fire-boat was unable to get close to the burning building. The fire-boat 47 and those were moored around the pier, the boat 47 could not run within 200 yards of the shore.

Lieutenant James Howard, Pierce Magnire and Philip Wentworth risked their lives and carried the lines ashore.

Hundreds of spectators on the Winthrop shore and on the Deer Island beaches watched the fire. Many motor boats and yachts from Boston harbor sailed up near the island to get a better view of the fire. Police of another part to safeguard the property. Many women became panic-stricken at the prospect of danger to the prisoners in case of necessity.

WILEY DECRIES HOME BREW

"Makes Worst Beer in World," Food Expert Tells Committee on Amendments

Washington, D. C., May 21—The home brewer in the morning breakfast or the guest in the evening will be in danger of getting a poor article, if Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, famous food expert, told the House Judiciary committee while testifying on modifications of the Volstead act.

"Home brew is the worst beer in the world," declared Dr. Wiley. "Most of the people who are making it ought to be in jail. No brewer would put out such stuff. No brewery would be allowed to operate. Some of the home brew I have seen would make a billy goat sick."

Dr. Wiley was one of the first witnesses called by the committee to testify on the proposed modifications. He was followed by Dr. Alice Lakey, who declared that the breaking up of families was one of the worst results of prohibition. Mrs. Lakey declared that drug addicts were increasing and that many women were becoming addicted to the use of cocaine.

Dr. Wiley said that the Volstead act should be modified to permit the manufacture of beer containing 2.75 per cent alcohol. He declared that the present law is unenforceable and that it is impossible to prevent the manufacture of home brew.

POLICE RIP OUT LAWRENCE BARS

Campaign to Put End to Liquor Traffic in Near Beer Saloons

Lawrence, May 21—Determined to prevent further illegal traffic in liquor, the Municipal Council, police officials and the liquor squad have begun tearing out fixtures in many saloons where liquor has been sold.

Hundreds of bars, tables and chairs are being torn out. It is thought that no liquor will be sold in Lawrence saloons for some time to come.

Mayor Scanlon, one of the leaders in the campaign to put an end to the traffic, declared that the breaking up of saloon fixtures was only the beginning of a campaign to rid the city of the liquor evil. Many saloon keepers have been raided, charged with violating the Volstead act and fined. Others have had their licenses revoked by the police commissioners.

Many of the saloons raided charged that they were forced to make illegal sales because of the fact that they could not make a profit on near beer.

Tariff Bill Report Gets Senate O. K.

Washington, May 21—The Senate agreed to the conference report on the Fordney emergency tariff bill by a vote of 52 to 25. The House will act on the report Monday.

The only important change the conferees made in the bill as passed by the Senate is the reduction from six to three months of the extension of the life and authority of the War Trade Board to license the importation of chemicals and dyestuffs.

DATE OF CHAPLIN WEDDING SET

Friends Hear Marriage to May Collins Will Take Place in December

New York, May 21.—Announcement of Miss Corinne Griffith, screen star, and Walter Morosco, theatrical producer, that they would be married here June 1 and sail for Europe on their honeymoon, was made today by Miss Griffith's mother, Mrs. Catherine Griffith, at the Griffith home in California.

"I cannot say anything about the wedding," Mrs. Griffith declared, "except that it will be a very quiet affair, with only relatives present. Corinne and Walter will be married in the morning and sail for Europe in the afternoon."

Mrs. Griffith refused to comment on reports that Miss Griffith had been married secretly to Morosco in Los Angeles last December.

Miss Griffith, who is now playing in "Love Special" at the Strand theatre here, has been married twice before. Her first husband was Harold Horne, a New York broker, whom she married in 1917 and divorced in 1919. Her second husband was Capt. Raymond Lee, a British aviator, whom she married in 1919 and divorced in 1920.

Miss Griffith's engagement to Morosco was announced in Los Angeles last March. Morosco is a native of Los Angeles and has been in the theatrical business there for many years.

Miss Griffith's mother, who is now in New York, said that her daughter had first met Morosco when she was a child in Los Angeles.

Miss Griffith is now appearing in the Strand theatre here in a picture entitled "Love Special."

Parmington, Mo., May 21.—Mrs. John Parsons, aged 13, was freed of a first degree charge in connection with the death of her stepdaughter, aged 8, and a charge of fourth degree manslaughter immediately made against her.

"I didn't do it purpose," was the child defendant's remark, when she heard the judge dismiss the murder charge against her.

FINE NOVEL OF ARTIST LIFE

To be a most renowned artist before one has reached the mature age of twenty-five is the happy lot of Annette Kellerman, who tells her fascinating story sometimes in the first person, sometimes in the third, under the title of "The Long Way Round" by Seaman Gifford Taylor.

The publishers are Small, Maynard & Company, Boston. In spite of the fearful strain put upon the reader's credulity time after time at the outset of the novel, it is very soon impressed with the truth and depth of Annette's experience, both as an artist and as a woman. Women readers will find her personality decidedly interesting in spite of the fact that she is a beautiful, spoiled daughter of the world.

TRULY THE ARTIST.

Annette is so truly the artist that loneliness is the argument most unknown to her, but as the brilliant French soldier of an English husband, with a Parisian education, a family home and assured position in a little old New York society is tempting, she is placent and intolerant to the last degree.

SHE IS FASCINATING.

Yet she is fascinating. Too keenly alive to her own fascination, she frequently repels, while a brilliant mind and a profoundly creative nature compel the keenest interest and engage the sympathy of her honest critics.

The book is most original. Sweet Annette, who is born in the windmill, not only a wonderful dancer, but also a wonderful swimmer, is carried by her unconventional strength and her daring swimming likewise. She is the rising star of the Folies Bergeres in Paris, a Parisian artist, a regular at the Quat' Arts ball, the friend of the Rena Jolliets, a Rumanian prince and even Annette's rejected suitor.

Incidentally Jealousy come into his own, but his triumph is where those of criminal intent who pursue others without too much success, in the end, are left. The fascinating Suzanne has a narrow escape, and is only to normal in the end, and Annette, and her lovely sister, Jeanne, are left to live happily ever after.

AGAINST NATURE.

There is no attempt at being heaven by a title, but Suzanne's fatality is to set up as the best of the

BIG CROWD OUT TO WATCH BRAVES AND REDS IN FINAL GAME

OESCHGER AGAINST NAPIER

Warm Day Lures Fans to Watch Effort to Win Fifth in Week

By NICK FLATLEY.

Big Joe Oeschger comes out today to pull the Pebble Hill act for the long route. The Miracolo were an extremely amusing set and took by the finale that any team could be, but Joe's mates will be out to make it unanimous and give the Pebble Hill pitcher a full game present.

Napier has been a thorn in the side of the Braves for a long time. He has been a tough proposition for the Boston National pitchers to solve, and he has been the cause of many a Brave defeat. Napier is a right-hander and has a good assortment of curves and a fast ball. He is a pitcher who has to be watched closely, as he is liable to pull a fast one at any time.

Oeschger has been pitching great ball of late and is in the best of condition. He has been working every four days and has been getting better with each start. Joe has a world of stuff and is a pitcher who is hard to solve when he is right. He has a fast ball, a curve and a change of pace that baffles the batters

The Signs of Deafness

By Brice Belden, M. D.

CHILDREN may reach school age without their parents suspecting that their hearing organs are defective, especially in cases where the hearing is only slightly defective and the child has made up for the deficiency by watching or "reading" the eyes and lips of those around him.

While these slight cases manage to get along much the same as their normal children about them, they soon find that they start to school, find it more or less difficult to compete with others in the classroom. Slight trouble with the ears may arise, if proper care during early stages, result in some serious condition later on.

Diseased adenoids are an indication of trouble which holds the possibilities of disaster and the condition should be treated before the signal of actual disaster has occurred, that is to say, a discharge from the ear. While catarrh is a frequent symptom the deafness cannot be considered.

If a child is born deaf the condition is usually noted during the first year or year and a half when it is observed that the child does not show the usual inclination to respond to sounds. Cases of partial deafness we have said before are often not detected until the child goes to school, where it makes itself felt that he is restless and inattentive. Other symptoms by which deafness is detected or suspected are a dull, vacant facial expression, a monotonous tone of voice, or inattentiveness.

To test a child's hearing one can place a watch at a distance of a few feet, and if the child cannot hear the ticking he should be taken to an ear specialist. A child with good hearing should be able to hear a loud whisper from a distance of twenty-five feet.

Adenoids and enlarged tonsils are common causes of deafness.

Temporary deafness may be caused by long accumulation of hardened wax in the ear canal.

Grips Heart of Spectators

In the court room scenes in "The Woman God Changed," a Cosmopolitan Production, which will be shown Monday at the Colonial for the first time, a large pendulum clock hanging on the wall of the court room, ticks slowly. It gives the effect of the ticking out of the life of Annie Jacobus quick for her life because of the murder of Alastair De Vries. The uncanny monotony and at the same time the fearful suspense of the trial is brought out excellently in these pictures of the pendulum signifying the slow but sure passage of justice. Dr. Frank Crane wrote powerful titles for this picture.

"The Woman God Changed" was adapted for the screen by Doty Hobart from the story by Tom Bergen which appears in Hearst's Magazine, and will begin as a serial on this page in the Boston American Monday. Robert G. Vignola directed the picture in which Seena Owen and E. K. Lincoln play the leading parts in a remarkable cast. Other members of the cast are Lillian Walker, Henry Sedley, H. Cooper Cliff, Paul Nicholson, Helen Darley, Tempier Pake and Joseph Burley.

What Baby Said

One dollar will be paid for each letter printed.

A woman having bought a house and just moved in, invited her sister and her little son, aged three years, to visit her and look over the house. Upon entering a room with a fancy painted ceiling, her son said, "Oh! look, mother, Auntie has her rug on the ceiling."

MRS. RALPH P. BEALD.

Stingiest Person

One dollar will be paid for each letter printed.

The stingiest person I ever saw was a man my husband and I made a call on one evening. Our host noticed that my husband had a wrecked cold and said: "I've got some whiskey. I'll give you a drink of it and it will knock that cold to pieces." He got the bottle out and held it to the light. "Gee," he said, "don't that look good? That looks too good to open. Gee, I guess I won't open it" and he didn't. MRS. H.

MRS. GOULD SPEAKS TO MOTHERS

In a nice letter to the Dr. J. F. True & Co., Mrs. Irving Gould of Chesterland, Ohio, says: "My baby is sick and it tends need of your Tonic. I ought not to be without it, for True's Elixir has done wonderful things for my children, and I am glad to answer any mother's inquiries in regard to True's Elixir."

If your children have these symptoms give them Dr. True's Elixir. Common complaints of motherhood: sweet breath, feeling of the nose and rectum, short dry cough, red points on the tongue, slow fever. Dr. True's Elixir, The Family Laxative and Worm Expeller is sold at all dealers. Three sizes. Buy the large size. —Advertisement.

HER OWN WAY

CHAPTER XVI.

Copyright, 1921, Star Company

HELEN GORMAN danced better than she knew. She was the type of girl who makes a good dancer—slight on her feet, slender and with a sense of rhythm.

Nor had she lacked the opportunity of taking lessons. A resident of Statesville had, after spending a Winter in San Francisco, returned to her native town and started a dancing class there. Mrs. Gorman had always heard that dancing made a girl graceful, so her daughter had taken lessons. Helen also had practice in dancing at several summer resorts to which Daniel Sloane had sent his sister and niece for brief vacations.

In spite of which experiences, Helen perceived that it was one thing to dance at a small Summer hotel under the eye of her mother and quite another to trip the light fantastic unchaperoned in a New York restaurant.

But she was observant, and all during dinner, long before numerous couples who were taking advantage of excellent music and a good floor, and with very little hesitation she followed her partner's lead.

She had spoken truly when he said that the orchestra at this place furnished excellent jazz. The spirit of the syncopations stirred the blood of this young descendant of a little country girl. Her feet kept perfect time to the music. As she would have expressed it, she "felt like dancing."

Around and around the room she and her partner went. Once when Helen glanced at the table she had left she saw her friends safely fixed on her. When Helen looked again Elizabeth and Willard were still dancing. She, too, was dancing.

A Marvelous Experience

This was a marvelous experience, the ingenue mused. Her eyes half closed, her heart beating high. She was actually here in New York where people did this kind of thing night after night! How many girls would envy Helen Gorman if they could see her now! And to think that, but for Elizabeth, she never might have come to live in this fascinating city!

"I wonder who that man is?"

Andrews had evidently spoken and the dance began. He said those words now as the music ceased with long enough for the dancers to stop for it to start once more.

"What name?" Helen asked.

"Why, there goes the music again," Andrews said, guiding his arm about her for the first time. "I'll tell you when you can hear it. I mean if the music holds out long enough. I'm not sure that I'll be able to." He started at my question, nearly as if he'd been at that early age when "Grandma was coming through the rye" bores.

As Andrews spoke the music ceased and the dancers came to a standstill, gradually before returning to their seats.

Helen glanced in the direction her partner indicated and met the eyes of a man sitting at a small table in the corner.

It was the girl gasped involuntarily.

She would have passed on, but Daniel Sloane rose to his feet and spoke her name.

"Helen!" he exclaimed harshly. "I can hardly believe my eyes! What are you doing here?"

For a instant the girl's childish fear of this man asserted itself. Then her common sense came to her assistance.

In that instant's pause she had a vague wonder if the cocktail she had taken had made her more courageous than usual. She had heard somewhere of "Dutch Courage."

The Man Is Surprised

"Good evening, uncle," she greeted him glibly. "I did not know you were in New York."

"Although I knew you were in New York, I hardly expected to see you here at"—he began.

But she interrupted him with—"Allow me to present Dr. Andrews, Dr. Andrews, this is my uncle, Mr. Sloane."

Daniel Sloane pretended not to see the young man's outstretched hand.

"Good evening," he said gruffly. "As I was saying, Helen, I did not expect to see you in a public place like this."

He paused, frowning. His niece met his eyes quizzically.

"No?" interrogatively. "Then we are both surprised. It is an interesting and amusing place, isn't it?"

She found it difficult to believe that she, Helen Gorman, was speaking in this tone to her august relative.

"It is hardly the place for a young girl of refinement to be dancing, especially a daughter is mourning for the mother who died so recently," he accused.

The blow was right home, and Daniel Sloane knew it did. Thomas Andrews felt the girl start and saw her color change. But even so, she did not lose her self-possession.

"My friends are waiting for me," she said briefly, taking Andrews arm. "Good-night."

And before Daniel Sloane could check her, she and her escort had moved off.

Fresh From Paris

THE straight little gown for evening, made with no special detail, but dependent on the beauty of fabric and line, is still in high favor in Paris. Such a gown as this is cut full over the hips and banded with a wide picking girdle of the material. Over it is worn a graceful tunic of silver gauze, with the color scheme a novel arrangement of silver grape leaves at a headdress.

It might be for the ballroom, this little gown of delicately embroidered chiffon of the palest shades of blue and tulle of the same tone. The severely plain, square-necked bodice falls distinctly at the side, and with it is made a panel of the embroidered tulle, finished with a cape of the leaves in the chiffon completes this costume for the maiden who will come out next year, perhaps.

But when she made two sudden steps to place herself between him and her husband he paused up and stopped. The heavy log had been long kept ready to place when needed, and from his pocket with a hand. He examined to the last where it must be used. He expected to be jolted.

"No, Peter," said Francis Manners, in an entirely safe tone for you to come not from behind my self. I am not a strong mind."

"You're a wise old wrong-headed," said Peter Manners. He advanced with a very pugnacious step, frowned and held the hat and glared at Frank that was like the size of the ball, and then, apparently satisfied with his inspection, began to fan himself with his hat.

"The whole world," he exclaimed, "knows that Mr. Penn has asked me as Manners to dine and spend the day."

"Oh," said Diana dreamily and in the voice of one who is suffering special pain. "I've been with you."

"That wouldn't be polite to them," said Peter Manners. "Frankly, the whole day has been a trying one hospitality we had found it wanting. We have even brought our luggage. We have brought everything we need except things for the night and toothbrushes and bathrobes and things like that."

Diana's hand on Frank's arm had been slowly sliding aloof, his face grown and ghost white, we have some because when a woman's good name goes, our last hope of happiness goes too. Penn knows that. And if he really reciprocate your chance of happiness, I couldn't him. I think you have much I've come to like things dear and I've brought Penn from the very path to ruin and death. But there's no great harm done."

"It all my fault," said Diana, she didn't want to run away with me."

"Mighty hard not to run away with you, Diana, when you was ready instant," said Peter Manners.

"It seems" said Francis Manners, that Penn and I both owe you very much. Thank you from heartiness in our hands and do want us this to bow for you."

Tears were in Diana's eyes.

"With two men loving me so much," she said, "I ought not to complain about anything."

Peter Manners, having divested himself of the greatcoat, came close to her, and took one of her hands to hold. It was cold, and he began to rub and warm it.

"Diana, dear," he said, "there are not two more wrong men in the world than you ever grouped for the man who was best most of your. Adding would have given his soul, everything but his honor, to be the groom."

"Have you never guessed why I haven't married? I love you with my whole heart and soul. But you were engaged to Frank, or almost engaged to him, when I found this out. And I am not the kind of man to break down another man's fences and trample on his flowers."

Three Men in Love

"I give you my word of honor," exclaimed Penn suddenly, "that I am not as black as you paint me!"

"Ah!" said Peter Manners, "you mistook what was left of the garden for a piece of pasture land. You didn't know that to Francis Manners it was still a garden. And that is how I nearly tried, and how, he still hoped to build up the fences and coax the flowers back."

"Peter," said Diana simply, "and Frank, I made ogden think that I had been terribly abused and misunderstood. I didn't tell him so; I let made him think so. I was a great deal happier with you, Frank, than I deserved to be. I've given you a rotten, selfish deal. When you went to California I was terribly lonely. I think I was lonely for you, and I was hard-up and bored, and mamma, and the country and everything got on my nerves. And because everybody has always spoiled me I, well, I met Ogden and liked him, and he was thoughtful and soothing.

"And—oh, he was just floating round bored and lonely and a long way from shore, and I leaned so far out of the boat that I fell in. He didn't make love to me. He is a gentleman and an honorable gentleman, whatever you think. One day I told him that I loved him and that I couldn't live without him. And I thought that with his love to back me up I could be strong and fine, and do right by you . . . and I can't . . . I can't!"

"I love you because of all the pure gold that is in you," said Peter Manners.

"And that is why I love you," said her husband.

The knowledge that Peter Manners, whom she admired immensely, had really been in love with her for many years had a softening effect on Diana's heart and a clarifying effect on her mind. Her vanity, too, must have been flattered, for it is certain that her eyes had become brighter and less tragic and her coloring more vivid. She had never looked more desirable.

And Francis Manners somehow felt that the disclosure, although the fact was old history to him, had relieved the tension under which he was laboring. Peter's love seemed to him more beautiful and less selfish than his own regrets. Penn was also relieved. He had but to look at the sweet-tempered, bold, and determined face of the man who had loved and remembered to see that an honest renunciation was going to be rounded on to bring contented confirmation to a spirit in chaos.

"Have you brought enough dinner for four?" asked Peter Manners. Diana smiled mirthily in his face.

"How good you are," she said, "and how kind."

"I'll go to the village," said Penn, "and get some food."

"Francis Manners, you're a man of wisdom and worth. Penn must wait to the top of the hill and retrieve an excellent basket of the picnic. Diana, don't look so frightened. Penn is good at the catching. He is to be a house guilty till after dinner. Don't you bring any food at all, Penn? I'll send what the servants call 'a little lunch' put up at the College Club," said Diana. Peter Manners smiled contentedly.

Back to Normal

"Do you put up a special abominable lunch?" he asked. "Because, I mean to climb the hill and sacrifice myself."

The two cousins and Diana stood near the top of the little hill a corner in which the deepening sun made a certain warmth. Penn had gone, and they heard the car start against a smooth road. Diana in the middle.

Into the next half hour Peter Manners put all that he had of tact and delicacy, all the fruits of his universal experience as a man of the world. Francis, on his behalved in short, for as if nothing had happened. He was confident, amused and amusing. It was not the first time that the two had made an excursion together.

They had always been great friends. They had always enjoyed being together and talking together. In their latter affair of a tearing and unreasonable passion had been a sort of interruption in their friendship.

Anecdotes and set stories were taken among them, and each had a way of laughing that was contagious to the other two.

But the effort to behave as if nothing had happened was a great effort, which opened Peter Manners' eyes and caused the greatest admiration of. And as time went on the effort was unnecessary. But after a while the habit is very strong, they began to respond.

And he observed, glancing sideways, that the muscles of his companion's face were relaxed, and that Diana's chin I even that was back from the rim of the world. Then Francis Manners seemed forth a explosion that confirmed us before there all the other. And made a certain friend of theirs at some ridiculous and lovable, and Diana and Francis were quite filled their minds with uproarious laughter.

And after that there was never a serious moment until suddenly—and it was like the change of scene at the play—they looked and were on the homeward way.

It was only habit that caused Diana to slip a hand beneath her husband's arm. That rested upon all faced with gold and crimson. him was as light—so light that it was wonderful that, through all his slavery, thick and thin, he should feel it at all. But he could not have been sure that she was touching him if her hand had been of iron instead of flesh.

Would she withdraw the hand swiftly when she realized what she had done with it? He kept as still as a mouse. He should even attempt to tame some wild thing. He held his breath.

When Diana realized what she had done, and somewhat obviously she slipped her other hand under Peter Manners' arm and she said:

"Help me up, you two."

They helped her to her feet.

"Penn," said Francis Manners very gently, "will be wondering what has become of us."

It had not occurred to Diana that Penn might not return to the house at all, that the dread of what these two tall and strong cousins might intend toward him might cause him to throw up his hands and abandon a position which in his heart of hearts he knew to be mistaken.

An Insistent Woman

But Penn, after some vacillating, had resolved to see the situation through. He didn't believe that the two cousins intended him any bodily harm, but he dreaded being alone with them, and his resolution had called on him for real courage.

It is true that the bachelor cousin had been casual and disquiet, but in the husbands face there had been a fatal look; and he feared that when they got him along they would put such pressure upon him as might squeeze out all his power of resistance.

It is not easy to stand up for the motives which are inciting one man to ruin another man's life and to compromise the whole future of a little child. To have run away with Diana, even at her insistence, would put him in a bad light "if her husband kills me," he thought, "even in cold blood, the jury will let him off, and people will merely say that I got what I deserved."

Post-Glacial America

De Geer Gets Records From Clay

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

THE Swedish geologist, Gerard De Geer, who is now exploring in America, has entered on a scheme for determining the chronology of the period that witnessed the evolution of man as well as of the whole fauna and flora of the existing animals and plants in America while during the Ice Age were barren deserts covered by extensive ice sheets.

He reads human-animated story depends, he says, on a definite succession of the ice, as if they had the significance of the rings of growth in a tree trunk, and from these degree the times that have elapsed since the receding ice passed recede points on its northward retreat.

"The annual laming from warmed years," he says, "being thicker and from colder ones thinner, the chronological self-registering is at the same time a thermographical one."

He puts the length of time covered by this natural-made chronological record at 15,000 years.

The American geologist, H. L. Fairchild, instancing the difficulties of fixing dates, and pointing out that the Hudson-Champlain Valley contains a continuous record of the retreat of the Laurentian glacier from the United States, remarks that we have no record of the long period of its advance nor of its long standstill at the long Island-Staten Island terminal moraine.

America in the Background

While, for many thousands of years, Asia, Europe and parts of Africa had been producing civilized nations and empires that were continually reacting upon one another, and gradually pushing the standard of human life higher, here in these grand, and by nature greatly favored, twin continents, living before the ocean, although man existed, yet his powers were very limited, his numbers were few, his mind was unprogressive, and he had practically nothing to add, nothing that could aid his race to attain a higher development.

The white man found nothing to learn in the new, as far as the human inhabitants of the latter were concerned. But the new world had everything to learn from the old. Our human America is a remade world, based on the stock of the Eastern Hemisphere, and individualized only by the effects of its fresh clime, and of its new untrammeled opportunities, acting upon and through the powers and qualities of the type of mankind first developed in Asia, Europe and Africa.

As far as the record yet shows, this side of the earth never developed a human type all its own, never had an Adam. While the human beings that found their way to it, from Asia, were not of a mixed species of high development. But when the right kind came from outside of the race America proved what she could do.

Sets a Longer Period

The striking result is only that of the diminishing moment and the reasons of its gradual decrease. Fairchild also says that Lamarck estimate of 24,000 years for the origin of east-glacial and recent deposits is underestimated in America, and he seems to approve it. Dr. Taylor's estimate that the glacial epoch covers from 50,000 to 100,000 years, he says, is reasonable, as it rests on many independent calculations, and refers to regions where the ice melts under an entirely similar climate to that which now exists. The importance considerations of the ice may have been connected with the succession of the mammoth, which, he says, "is the most striking fact in the evolution of the animals of the glacial period, produced very likely by the migration from the north and south with regard to the line of equilibrium, the result being an alternation of the cold and of glacial temperature in the northern hemisphere.

At present it is important to remark, we have no data of the glacial periods, our winters occurring when the earth is in perihelion, or nearest to the sun.

The prehistoric record of man's presence on the earth is mostly confined to the later glacial and early interglacial times. He may have managed to exist through several conditions between cold and heat in addition, but he seems to have done nothing of great importance, showing his vast superiority over the lowest sort of animal, until the earliest stages of glaciation had disappeared. The cold periods which may be ascribed to Pleistocene and Arctic revolution alone are of relatively slight severity and duration when compared with what the rest of things must have been during the greater ice invasions.

America is the land of the old world in the indications that it has thus far offered of the presence of man immediately on the heels of the last retreat of the ice. This may explain the historical fact that our continent in spite of all its vast and wonderful natural resources, its rich soil, navigable rivers, magnificent harbors, immense fertile valleys and prairies, healing climate, great aboriginal provision of varied and useful plants, and splendid scenery, was found when Europeans began to take possession of it, only 400 years ago, to be inhabited merely by scattered tribes of savages, living in their most advanced stages of culture, as in Mexico and Peru, had hardly succeeded beyond the middle stage of barbarism.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

A Diamond in the Rough

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am twenty-one, and during the past eight or nine months have been going about with a young man two years my senior.

This young man is very brilliant, rather good looking and has an attractive personality, so that I have decided I really like him. The trouble is, however, that he appears to everybody to be rough, inconsiderate and impolite. I see all this myself, but I am quite sure that this is all a "front" and only on the surface, because he doesn't want to give a girl the satisfaction of saying that he likes her. Besides all this I know he has a good heart and a noble soul and I am sure he cares for me.

Now don't you think that a man like him is just as good as and even better than the polished and polite dandy who keeps on paying compliments all the time? Isn't real, true character to count? My people are very much opposed to him, but have decided to abide by your decision. O.

Of course, character counts. But there's nothing to be gained by roughness and the consequent wounded feelings that must follow. Bad manners are a habit. If the man loves you he ought to make some effort to impress favorably those near and dear to you. I see no reason for putting him out of your life—but I see no reason for letting him "get away" with his ungraciousness. Talk to him pleasantly but firmly about the effect he has on people and the importance of making friends.

Herself or Her Money?

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a widow, very much in love with a man quite a few years younger than I. He says he loves me madly, but I am uncertain whether he loves me or my money. He knows I have been left a little money by my husband. Can you suggest some way that I can test him?

ANXIOUS.

There really is no magic test for love. Your doubts may come from a cynical nature. Time may be needed for things which make for happiness to everybody to really care for you. Face facts and harvest truths.

Jealousy vs. Love

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a girl of five years old, considered well off, and have been going about with a young man of three-quarters for four months. This young man claims to love me, but at times I have reason to believe that it is only for my money. He cares for some friends of mine told me that they saw him in the company of other women at various times. Tell me what to do, as I idolize him and life without him would be unbearable. Do you believe the difference in our ages is too much?

ALICE L.

The difference in your ages wouldn't keep you from being happy if you were capable of recognizing the rights of the man you love to his own individuality, if you're going to demand that he live his life only through you and to let jealousy and suspicion creep into your relationship is to become unbearable in any case.

Hints for the Household

A lump of starch dissolved in water for cleaning windows is more effective than whitening. Boiled starch may be washed over newly-cleaned linoleum and allowed to dry. This will form a skin and if the linoleum is to be polished a very small quantity of polish need be used.

Forbes Talks About Rich Men; Stock Market Is Pessimistic

Colonel E. M. House is a multi-millionaire on the newspapers. But not in actuality. He is neither a multi-millionaire, nor, I understand, a millionaire. I am told that he is not wealthy. And that he, like the rest of us, must find means of earning a living. Had he been a speculator, he doubtless could have made money while he was hand-in-glove with the last administration. But he can't hair that way.

Talking of wealth, here's a story never before published. I give it as I got it.

Playmates of the Rockefeller children asked them, one day during the war, what had become of their ponies. The Rockefeller boys explained that each had to contribute something to help to win the war, and in order to do this they had parted with their ponies.

One of the boys would have given up anything rather than his pony. He was the last to suggest the sacrifice, but the earliest to make it.
